85th Report

For its hundred and one years of existence, the Royal National Institute for the Blind has always sought to consider the needs of the blind as people, young or old, men or women, born blind or becoming blind in later life. They are all individuals who need individual care. In recent years, the complex pattern of children born blind with other physical and mental handicaps has made this respect for the diversity of needs of the blind, and of their differing potential, particularly important.

But the aim of the RNIB remains the same: to encourage the blind to fit naturally into the community and to help them to lead a full and fruitful life within the limits of their handicap.

In many ways we can feel justifiably proud of past progress. The blind in Britain continue to enter open employment in industry and the professions in a proportion unparalleled anywhere in the world. The new career of computer programmer pioneered by the Institute has proved a very useful outlet for skilled blind men and women with an analytical turn of mind.

But the future will present an immense challenge to the RNIB and all those concerned in helping the blind. Modern inventions and technology should assist us in increasing our output of braille and Talking Books, and this we intend to do. They should also help in improving both the aids to and teaching of mobility, and it will be our aim to ensure that, wherever applicable, modern scientific progress is applied imaginatively in helping blind people. We will also try to make sure that future progress and invention are used to the full in improving the quality of life for every blind person in the country, in increasing their independence and mobility, and enlarging their experience. It is a challenging aim, but with your help we intend to do everything we can towards achieving it. Just as our past achievements have depended on your help, so will our future aims.

Chairman

The RNIB and its finances

The RNIB is, today, the largest organisation of its kind in the world and the range of its services is unique in the world of blind welfare. The compass of its care extends from nursery schools for blind toddlers to purpose-built homes for the elderly blind; from training establishments for physiotherapy and for commercial subjects to residential rehabilitation and retraining for working men and women and for housewives who want to resume their normal household duties; from a placement service for blind adolescents and for those who want to enter the professional and commercial world to the design and manufacture of aids to leisure as well as work.

But the Institute began life 101 years ago as a publisher for the blind, and books for the blind remain high on the list of priorities. This fact is reflected in the expenditure on braille printing, special apparatus and the Talking Book Library. It is by far the largest item in our budget.

It is not, perhaps, widely appreciated that all the books, aids and apparatus that we sell to the blind are heavily subsidised. Any braille book bought by any blind member of the public costs him one-eighth of the cost of production. Despite the fact that braille books are far more expensive to produce than inkprint, the cost to the blind customer is less than it would be to a sighted person buying the same book in print from a bookshop. Some of the magazines published by the Institute in braille and Moon are free. Two of the most popular, the Radio Times and the News Summary, are good examples. Membership of our Talking Book Library (which is largely composed of the elderly) is free, although an annual rental charge of three pounds is made for the hire of the playback machine.

We are proud to be able to offer this service to the blind. But the blind among us increase in numbers every year. To fulfil our responsibilities towards them, we as a voluntary organisation must look to you, the public, for support. In order to meet our commitments, we have had to rely increasingly on legacies to ensure that our work will continue.

You have been generous in the past; may we ask you to continue to support us so that we can carry on with our work for the blind?

In this report you will read much which will merit your continued interest. For your help in the past and for your future sympathetic consideration of our needs we are sincerely grateful.

“AS LONG as human beings may be handicapped, it is indeed important that the RNIB continues to be a symbol and a source of hope and help.”—Telegram from Helen Keller to the Institute, March 1968.

Naturally 1968—centenary year—was a great landmark for the RNIB, a year of celebrations and thanksgiving, of national and international recognition for 100 years of ever-expanding and developing ways of serving the blind. But the needs of Britain's 115,000 blind are too pressing and immediate to rest on past achievement. The work must go on. So it is fitting that in our 100th birthday year we celebrated with new departures, by designing new equipment and apparatus, by providing new accommodation, by introducing a new concept of care in blind welfare.

In the midst of our celebrations, in June 1968, the RNIB opened its first holiday hotel, the Century Hotel, a modern, five-storey building with lifts to all floors, spacious lounges, a bar and ballroom and single and double accommodation for 35 guests. The hotel at Blackpool is “normal” in every sense except that blindness is the only passport to admission. The Century Hotel is a far cry from the “double prisons”, the asylums and institutions of 1868 where unfortunate blind people were shut away from friends and family to languish.

It was particularly appropriate that one of the first guests at Blackpool, Mrs Sarah Massey, was a hundred years old herself. She is a lady who, in her lifetime, has witnessed a revolution in the prospects of health and happiness, of education, employment and leisure for those without sight. It is a revolution in which our Institute has played no small part.

Nor were the deaf-blind neglected in centenary year. Work for this important minority, hampered by a double handicap, was pioneered by the RNIB nearly 40 years ago. In Harrogate at the end of the year the first purpose-built home for the deaf-blind was opened for use (although the official opening by the Archbishop of York did not take place until February 1969). The accommodation for 30 elderly deaf-blind men and women is in accordance with the latest developments in design for the handicapped. Each resident has an individual toilet adjoining his bedroom, and sitting rooms are close by on the ground floor so that these senior residents who can neither see nor hear need negotiate no steps. This is the third time in 30 years in Harrogate that we have improved accommodation for the deaf-blind. The new home, Tate House, in Wetherby Road, cost £105,000.

One further practical landmark in centenary year was the opening of a new instructional block for the newly-blind at the Institute's Torquay rehabilitation centre.

Every year 2,000 men and women between the ages of 16 and 65—that is, in their working life—go blind. The centre at Torquay helps to give back to some of these people who have met with blindness a new zest for living, new practical skills for coping with daily life and new possibilities for enjoying life in the community and with their families.

The new instructional block, opened by Mr Ernest Fernyhough, Joint Parliamentary Under Secretary of State at the Department of Employment and Productivity, will give the “new-comers” more scope for learning and living. The “intake” department has been extended, capstan lathes have been introduced into the machine shop and the mobility department has been completely reorganised to accommodate the six specialists who now teach the long cane technique, the method of mobility which can offer the blind man and woman greater freedom of movement. All the teaching activity from elementary braille to handicrafts and pre-vocational training is now centralised in one block.

Our founder, Dr Armitage, would have welcomed and understood these new departures. He was always looking for new methods of helping the blind. Since he was a realist and losing his own sight, he knew that what the blind need is constructive and imaginative help, not pity.

Galas and Gifts

The year was interspersed with great occasions. But the highlight was undoubtedly the centenary exhibition held at the Royal Horticultural Society's Old Hall. As patron of the RNIB, Her Majesty the Queen opened the exhibition, designed to present the whole spectrum of the Institute's work, from the production of braille and Moon and Talking Books to the work in nursery schools with multiply-handicapped blind children illustrated by short colour films. Schoolboys and girls from Worcester and Chorleywood, the grammar schools maintained by the RNIB, demonstrated practical class work, and blind craftsmen plied their trades. In a full-scale model of a purpose-built flat for the elderly blind, housewives demonstrated how they coped with the daily household chores. Over 5,000 people visited the exhibition, which served as an important bridge between the blind and the sighted.

Another gala occasion was the centenary banquet given by the RNIB at the Clothworkers' Hall in March of last year. Among the distinguished guests were the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs of the City of London, the Master of the Clothworkers' Company and the Executive Director of the American Foundation for the Blind. Messages of goodwill and congratulations from directors of blind welfare overseas emphasised the international flavour of the banquet. But it was perhaps the principal guest, the Minister of Health, the Rt Hon. Kenneth Robinson, who struck the true note of the celebration. "We recognise", he said in the course of his speech, "that a blind person is an individual with his own capabilities and his own contribution to make to our common life and that his place is in society where his potentialities can be realised to the full".

One of the most moving ceremonies of the centenary year was the service of thanksgiving held in October at St Margaret's Westminster, in the presence of HRH the Princess Margaret, Countess of Snowdon, and the Lord Mayor of the City of Westminster. Blind clergy assisted in the service, which was attended by many blind people and members of the Institute's staff. The sermon was preached by the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Our annual general meeting at the International Students House, Great Portland Street, held a particularly international character, since it was attended by all the members of the European Committee of the World Council for the Welfare of the Blind, to which the RNIB played host.

Delegates from 22 countries participated in our centenary celebrations. They attended a reception given by the Prime Minister and Mrs Wilson at 10 Downing Street, and a reception at the Martini Terrace, New Zealand House, which was honoured by the presence of HM Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother, a patron of the RNIB.

It was unthinkable that during this important centenary year the blind themselves should be forgotten. Our Council took the view that it should do something of practical benefit to every blind man, woman and child in the British Isles. It felt, rightly, as events subsequently proved, that its many and varied services were insufficiently well known to a large number of blind people. Since nearly 13,000 people go blind every year, it could take some time for those living far from the cities to find out what services are available.

At the beginning of 1968 we issued a combined greetings card and gift voucher to every blind individual, the voucher being available as payment of £1 during the course of centenary year for any of the services (all already heavily subsidised) provided by the RNIB.

In all, no less than 71,258 of these vouchers were redeemed. Naturally, as was anticipated, there were a number of blind people who did not wish to avail themselves of this offer, and the unexpended balance has gone to establish a special Centenary Fund which will be used to augment normal assistance funds to meet any exceptional cases of difficulty or hardship where a financial grant would appear to provide the best solution.

Sir Theodore Tylor

The close of our centenary year was overcast by the death of our chairman, Sir Theodore Tylor, an outstanding academic lawyer, a tireless worker for blind people and a vigorous and forceful personality who looked on blindness as "something you had to find a way around".

For 44 years he served the Institute, and his knowledge of and enthusiasm for it was inspiring. His particular interest in the blind world lay in the field of education. He was devoted to Worcester College, his old school, and was vice-chairman of its governing body for 32 years. He was also deeply concerned with the prevention of blindness and was chairman of the Prevention of Blindness Committee for the last eight years of his life. He was also a member of the National Uniform Type Committee, and on the Ministry of Health's Advisory Committee on the Handicapped. In the year he died, he was elected honorary treasurer of the British Wireless for the Blind Fund. We sadly miss his hard work and his wise counsel.

As a memorial to Sir Theodore, the Institute has decided to make available a sum of £50,000 for a research centre at Birmingham University for the purpose of research into the field of education for the blind.

At its December meeting, the Executive Council elected its distinguished vice-chairman, The Rt Hon. the Viscount Head, PC, GCMG, CBE, MC, as Chairman of the Institute in succession to Sir Theodore Tylor and appointed Mr Duncan Watson, himself a most able blind lawyer, as vice-chairman.

However, with all the excitement, the acclaim of centenary year, the important daily work of the Institute progressed: the work of caring for young blind children and counselling their parents, of educating schoolchildren, of restoring the newly-blind to a vigorous life, training and providing suitable employment for the adult blind.

A complex challenge

The early years are particularly important for blind children, and our Sunshine Homes for blind toddlers are happy places to grow up in. Parents with blind children tend, understandably, to overprotect them, to restrict them from that very exploration, that discovery by touch and smell of the physical world, which is so vital in stimulating their development.

Today our nursery schools are facing a particularly difficult challenge. For more than a decade the number of blind children born with other physical and mental handicaps has been on the increase. The children who come to our nurseries today often present a confusing pattern of handicaps, blindness together with perhaps deafness or spasticity. They may be hydrocephalic, spina bifida or educationally subnormal. The multiple handicap has unfortunately become more of the rule than the exception among the born blind. The Institute has evolved a pattern for helping to give these heavily handicapped little ones the fullest and happiest life that it is possible for them to have.

Through music and movement, through encouraging the child in any activity—even naughtiness is welcomed as a sign of emergent personality—the Sunshine Homes achieve marvellous results with these youngsters. Maximum peak achievement is to get them into an ordinary school for the blind. But usually the goal is not so high. Some of them will not even live long enough to go to school. But those who do will learn to become socially acceptable members of a community and to make a contribution, however small, to society. Others will never master the three Rs. In our homes they do learn to live in a happy “family” environment, with staff who have infinite patience and sympathy and wide experience of dealing with these severely-handicapped children. Today it is rare to have a child with the single handicap of blindness admitted to our Sunshine Homes.

Helping parents

Parents are naturally worried and anxious when they have a normal blind child. With the increase in the incidence of additionally-handicapped blind children, it is inevitable that the services of our Parents’ Unit at Northwood are even more in demand. These parents do badly need the advice of those with experience. The unit consists of a modest suburban villa where parents can come to stay for a week and gain the guidance of a friendly adviser who can tell them what the future may hold for their child. Through this week’s help they develop a new insight in dealing with him. With such a complex of handicaps, where blindness itself may be only secondary, it is clear that each child needs individual attention to grow and develop at his own pace.

From the Sunshine Homes, some of the children progress to Rushton Hall, a junior residential school for 45 additionally-handicapped blind children between the ages of seven and twelve. At Rushton, the children are not confined to a rigid school timetable but enjoy a surprisingly diverse number of activities, such as poultry-keeping, music-making and swimming in a heated pool.

In June, as part of our centenary celebrations, the school was honoured by a visit from HRH the Princess Margaret, Countess of Snowdon. As President of the Sunshine Homes and Schools for Blind Children, the Princess takes a particular interest in the education of blind children, and she expressed a special feeling for our services for the additionally-handicapped.

Condover Hall is the senior of our schools for this type of blind child, and here expansion has been taking place to meet a new plan whereby children will live in “families” of seven or eight with a housemother in charge of each family. The children are encouraged to reach out from their own “family” into the village of Condover and eventually to Shrewsbury, by the creation of a system of carefully graduated privileges and incentives which spur them, severely-handicapped as they are, to manage a haircut in town or a visit to the cinema by themselves.

Pace setters

Our schools for additionally-handicapped blind children are highly regarded. In an atmosphere of security and warm guidance, the children learn to develop as individuals at their own pace. At the best, when they leave they may be absorbed into some relatively undemanding sheltered type of employment. But Condover leavers will grow into adults able to cope with their own personal needs and even contribute in a small way to family life rather than remaining at the level of very retarded, handicapped people, totally dependent.

Far removed, academically and in atmosphere, are the grammar schools for the blind maintained by the RNIB: Worcester College for boys and Chorleywood for girls. At these schools boys and girls live a robust school life, combining serious school work with plenty of opportunity for sport, leisure and contact with the sighted world around them. The only residential grammar school for blind boys in Britain or the Commonwealth, Worcester has a proud record of academic achievement. It is in keeping with Worcester's policy of being up-to-date with opportunities for the blind that two masters at the school have been instructed in the long cane technique. In 1969 the boys will receive intensive and methodical training in this form of mobility, which has come to assume such an important role in the training of blind people.

Swimming and rowing on the river have always been popular sports at Worcester, and the new indoor swimming pool has been put to good use. At Worcester, all ten boys who left the school in July 1968 are going on to further education. Four of the ten have gained university places, one boy is to read law, one has a place at a teacher training college, one is entering the Royal Academy of Music and the other three are studying for A-levels. The grammar schools, in fact, Chorleywood and Worcester, turn out men and women who become pace-setters in the blind world.

In the new wing at Chorleywood, sixth form girls gain the valuable experience of "fending for themselves". They live in four flats with individual bed-sitters and lounges, and must practise independent mobility in their daily journeys from their "home" to the school. The pupils at Chorleywood live a happy, almost normal, school life, whether they are studying, shining up ropes in the gym or cooking in the specially-designed modern kitchen.

This extract of an account from a school "journey" to Bergen gives the feeling of the school spirit. The girls went there in July of 1968,

14 of them accompanied by four members of staff. Here is an extract from one pupil's account: "For lunch . . . we chose a pretty spot under a high bank . . . where we could hear the sound of a waterfall. We were all very hungry and the buns, meat, cheese and tomatoes were soon all demolished . . . we proceeded to climb a wall into another boggy field where we crossed a river on stepping stones . . . we arrived in Bergen in time for the greedy ones to have supper straight away and for the fussy ones to go back to the hostel first to wash and change. Although this had been an exhausting day, it had also been a most enjoyable one."

Last year Chorleywood said farewell to the headmistress, Miss Dorothy McHugh, who retired after 25 years of wholehearted dedication to the school and the girls in her care. We are, however, pleased to welcome the new headmistress, Miss M. I. F. Markes, and feel confident that under her guidance the school will maintain the high standard that has always been its pride.

Learning to earn

For blind young people of the calibre of those leaving Chorleywood and Worcester, the Institute's School of Physiotherapy, the only one of its kind in the Commonwealth, offers an ideal opening. For physiotherapy has come to be recognised as a profession in which blind people can achieve complete parity with their sighted colleagues. Today, four per cent of physiotherapists in this country are blind, and the majority of British students are appointed on graduation to hospitals within the National Health Service. The School retains its international flavour and in the past year four of the nine students who qualified came from overseas, from Canada, Malaysia, Nigeria and South Africa.

For boys and girls with an academic or professional bent, the way ahead is clear. What of those not so inclined? In 1956, the Institute pioneered a new concept in the training of the blind in opening Hethersett, a centre in Reigate designed to give to adolescents leaving the restricted world of the school for the blind some pre-vocational training in such skills as typing, telephony and light engineering. The centre also aims to give students a wider understanding of the sighted community in which they must ultimately find their place. So successful has this centre been that a second assessment centre was subsequently opened by the Birmingham Royal Institution for the Blind. Throughout the past year Hethersett has had a waiting list.

Of the 35 students who left Hethersett last year, 17 were absorbed into industry without further training, seven went on to train in light engineering, seven to train in shorthand-typing or telephony and one to train as a piano-tuner.

The proportion of blind people employed in a sighted world is higher in Britain than in any other country and the Institute's educational and training establishments can take a large share of the credit.

At Pembridge Place, the RNIB's commercial college, students are trained to a high degree of accuracy and efficiency in audio-typing, shorthand and telephony. Their frequent successes in the Royal Society of Arts examinations and their high reputation in the commercial world ensure them of a satisfying future. In the December examination in Intermediate Typewriting, one of our candidates was placed first in a countrywide entry of 25,000.

The Minister of Health, the Rt Hon. Kenneth Robinson, pointed out in his speech at our centenary banquet that "it was the Institute which pioneered and developed an employment service for blind men and women".

Finding a niche

Our work in placing blind men and women was so successful that by 1963 no fewer than 5,521 men and women had been placed in "open" employment, that is, working alongside sighted colleagues. Our service proved to be of such vital importance to the blind that, in 1963, the then Ministry of Labour (now the Department of Employment and Productivity) assumed responsibility for routine industrial placement on a national scale. This left the Institute free to concentrate its expert knowledge upon creating and developing commercial opportunities and administrative and professional placement, placing students leaving the Hethersett centre and developing the industrial, commercial and professional aids which make it possible for a blind worker to do his job properly.

Our placement department maintains a ceaseless vigilance on behalf of blind workers. Last year, for example, they conducted a study of the problems of 1,300 blind people employed in commercial and clerical fields, with particular reference to their prospects of promotion. The results will enable us to help the blind to find solutions to the varied problems attendant on their employment.

One of our most successful breakthroughs in recent years has been to make it possible for suitable blind candidates to be trained in the modern profession of computer programming. They use braille editions of training manuals, together with recorded material, and so far over 60 blind men and women have successfully taken up this new profession

Fresh start

As new opportunities for blind school leavers have increased over the years, so too have the possibilities of a productive and useful working life for those who face blindness in working age. Over the years since the Second World War when the Institute took over the task of rehabilitating the civilian blind, the value of residential rehabilitation has been proved over and over again. Learning to come back to life, which is literally what those who lose their sight have to do, is far easier in the companionship of others in a similar plight and of staff some of whom are blind themselves. The example of blind men and women living a happy and useful life proves a lesson more effective than any lecture from a platform. An average of 400 residents a year pass through the rehabilitation centre at Torquay, the vast majority of them to successful employment.

At Oldbury Grange, in Shropshire, the emphasis is on social readjustment rather than re-employment. Designed primarily for the housewife who wants to return home and care for her family, the facilities at Oldbury enable her to learn to cook, to sew and to iron so that she may return home to resume her rightful place in her family.

Books in bulk

The RNIB started life as a publisher for the blind, and despite the variety and diversity of tasks and services our Institute undertakes today for blind people, producing books for the blind remains one of our main functions. Each year we increase the volume of production to meet the growing need. During the year our braille presses produced over 100,000 copies of books and pamphlets, and no less than 538,709 magazines and periodicals. A random glance through the new titles published during the year gives an indication of the range of interests served: a volume of the Penguin Modern Poets, the year's football fixtures, a guide to the Proms, a computer programming manual, a Len Deighton thriller and a knitting pattern for a two-piece cocktail suit.

The use of a computer to assist in the speedier production of braille, forecast in our report last year, has proceeded apace and by the end of the period under review several titles had been produced through the application of this forward-looking development in modern technology which will continue to be used increasingly in the future.

We also produced over 5,600 volumes of Moon type, an embossed adaptation of the Roman alphabet so useful for the elderly blind who have no longer the sensitivity in their fingers to decipher the tiny braille dots.

But not all embossed books are machine-printed. Our Students' Library stocks thousands of volumes of books of an academic nature, covering many subjects and many languages, all hand-transcribed by volunteers who give generously of their time. 1,271 volumes were added to stock during the year, and 17,871 volumes were sent out to members.

Modern methods

Perhaps no invention of modern technology has brought more pleasure to the ever-growing numbers of senior blind citizens than Talking Books. This literature on tape, recorded by professional readers, means in effect that elderly blind people can simply "switch on" a book for hours of enjoyment. And when they want to change their book, they just pop it in the letterbox (post free). So popular is our Talking Book service that from 1960 to 1968 it has increased in size by 20,000 new readers. At present, about 26,000 blind members use the service, almost a quarter of the blind population of the country. A large part in the development of this service has been played by volunteer servicing engineers who freely give of their time and expert knowledge to help to instal machines and to service them in the areas in which they reside.

It is not only the elderly, of course, who benefit from recorded literature. With more and more young blind people going into industry and the professions, more textbooks and professional material are constantly needed to keep them up-to-date. In recent years, a Student Tape Library with a growing stock of over 400 books on specialist subjects has become available to help young people study for their future. We are indebted for the development of this service to a large number of volunteers who record books at home, using their own tape recorders.

The Institute has developed over the years many aids which help blind people fit into the sighted world. These vary from braille watches to embossed maps, from bread-cutters and egg-poachers to such sophisticated electronic devices as a battery-operated electronic thermometer with thermistor sensing element, accurate to within one per cent, a probe which measures the intensity of light, a soft foam rubber play-ball with a rechargeable electronic core. Our technical department has been responsible for the development of over 300 aids which make life easier for the blind. All these are on sale at a very reduced price to any blind member of the public.

Home from home

It is not perhaps generally appreciated when we speak of the blind that well over two-thirds of them in Britain are over 65 (in fact the greatest incidence of blindness now occurs in the over-eighties), and as the proportion of the elderly age group of the population as a whole is increasing with an improved standard of living and medical care, so we can expect a corresponding addition to the total elderly blind population. To ensure that these older sightless people receive the care and comfort they need, the Institute has made a number of changes to holiday and residential homes. More and more the trend is towards ground floor accommodation, to special nursing care. But however well-designed and comfortable premises may be, these homes are first and foremost communities of men and women, and their happiness, when all is said and done, is almost entirely due to the patience and understanding of the staff, from matron to humblest domestic worker. Without this care, our homes would be less worthy of the name. Elderly and frail though the majority of our residents are, one must not suppose that they lead restricted lives. Many and varied are the activities in which they participate: outings, sales of work and concerts.

Thought for the future

The Institute is naturally deeply involved in the care of those who have lost their sight, but we must never forget that prevention of blindness is one of the objectives laid down in the charter of the RNIB. By generous financial support of research projects it has played its part in helping to further research and investigate the factors which lead to blindness in order to detect and eventually eradicate the causes. In an important booklet published by the RNIB this year, Mrs Dorothy Campbell, FRCS, traces the research work sponsored by the Institute in the field of prevention of blindness from 1962-67.

During the past six years the Institute has made grants towards research totalling £200,000 for such projects as investigation into the genetic causes of blindness, the reasons for failure in corneal grafting in a minority of cases, and to a number of other ophthalmological and biochemical investigations.

The Royal National Institute for the Blind was originally founded as the British and Foreign Blind Association, and the international character of our work has never been lost. This year our Director-General was invited to Toronto to take part in the golden jubilee celebrations of the Canadian National Institute for the Blind and at the close of the year under review he visited Libya at the invitation of its government to advise on development of services to the blind.

In Britain, blind welfare is passing through a time of change. A Government committee of enquiry, the Vernon Committee, is looking into the whole question of education of the visually-handicapped with special reference to the diminishing numbers of blind children born with only one handicap, blindness, and the increasing numbers born with additional handicaps.

The Scebohm report on the development of the welfare services, with its emphasis on integration of work for the handicapped, has disturbed many of those with long experience of the work of blind welfare. This report will undoubtedly have a profound effect on all welfare matters and particularly on blind welfare, where the principle of specialisation has enabled this country to maintain its proud record of service to the blind.

In this report we have attempted to sketch the broad outlines of our welfare scheme. Our aim remains, as it has always been, to do our best for the blind. We at the Institute are deeply conscious of the debt of gratitude we owe to the many voluntary helpers who so generously give of their support year after year. It is a pleasure to record our grateful thanks to them and to assure them that without their help we could never have achieved so much.

To our Director-General, Mr J. C. Colligan, CBE, and his staff we record our appreciation for their work during the year, without which this report would not have been possible.

NOTICE TO ANNUAL SUBSCRIBERS

The Institute, being a Charity, is not liable to Income Tax, but you have to pay tax on the income out of which you pay your subscription. The Institute is allowed to recover the tax paid by you in relation to your subscription, but only if you have signed the seven-year covenant set out below. The following examples show how you can substantially increase the value of your contribution:

| Annual Subscriptionto be paidby subscriber | Income Tax (at 8/3in £), recoverableby Institute fromInland Revenue | Total valueof subscription tothe Institute |

In Column 1 look for the amount of subscription you usually make. (Let us take as an example £2). Column 3 shows the amount of gross income (£3 8s. 1d.) you must receive to leave you with £2 after tax at 8s. 3d. in the £ has been deducted from £3 8s. 1d. Column 2, which is simply the difference between Columns 1 and 3, shows the amount of tax deducted (£1 8s. 1d.) which the Institute can recover from the Inland Revenue, thereby increasing the value of your cash subscription of £2 to a total of £3 8s. 1d.
